The Lakers have been mostly bad on the road all year: Monday's five-point loss (SU and ATS) in Philadelphia dropped them to 3-9 ATS in road games this season. Meanwhile, the Celtics finally have their lineup healthy again and seem to be in the beginning stages of a major run. They're coming off back-to-back double-digit wins and, unlike last year's home loss to the Lakers, are expected to have their full complement of front-court players for this game.

Denver is 10-2 SU (8-4 ATS) in the past 12 meetings with Golden State, which includes six straight at home (4-2 ATS). Since 2006-07, the Nuggets are averaging a hefty 118.9 PPG in 18 meetings. This includes a 134-111 drubbing last April, when Nuggets exploded for 80 in the second half. And considering Danilo Gallinari didn't play that night, the Nuggets shouldn't miss their leading scorer, who is out indefinitely with an ankle sprain.

The Kings have won six in a row ATS, and they're 6-4 SU and ATS at home this year. Sacramento has defended far better during this recent stretch, holding opponents to 42.7% FG over the past six games. Oklahoma City has won by more than seven in Sacramento just once in six visits they've made since moving from Seattle and becoming the Thunder. That was an eight-point win over a short-handed and overall mess of a Kings team last April.
