Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau told reporters that he plans on playing his starters in the final two games in order to build some chemistry after an injury-filled second half. It's especially good news considering Derrick Rose's solid showing (11 points, 8 assists in 32 minutes) in his return to action in Saturday's win over Dallas. The Pacers, meanwhile, seem content to get some rest heading into the post-season. Leading scorer Danny Granger (knee) won't play.

New York will have C Tyson Chandler back in the lineup on Wednesday, which should make a huge difference after the team allowed 112 points in Atlanta on Sunday. The Knicks have just been too tough at home since Mike Woodson took over, going 10-1 SU and ATS. Clippers PG Chris Paul tweaked a groin injury in Tuesday's loss at Atlanta and is questionable for Wednesday. L.A. is just 2-5 SU (3-4 ATS) playing the finale of a road/road back-to-back this year.

This game is meaningless with San Antonio clinching the No. 1 seed and Phoenix out of playoff contention. But expect the Suns to put forth a much greater effort in their season finale as they try to finish above .500. This could also be free agent-to-be Steve Nash's final game in Phoenix, which gives him added incentive. Gregg Popovich has rested his veteran starters all season, and there is no reason Tim Duncan, Manu Ginobili or Tony Parker should play here.
